

Mule deer fawns survive by hiding during the first weeks of their lives. Their fur is brown and black with white spots, which helps them blend into their surroundings.

